Charges Against Man Who Destroyed 3D-Printed 'Decoy' Flock Camera Drastically Reduced After State Admits It Was Not Very Valuable

JASON KOEBLER • SEP 15, 2026 AT 11:43 AM

Three felonies have suddenly become two second-degree misdemeanors.

In a move that should surprise zero people but is worth noting nonetheless, three felony charges against a man who destroyed a police officer's "decoy" 3D-printed Flock camera have been reduced to misdemeanors after the police admitted the fake camera was not worth more than a thousand dollars.

In August, we wrote about the Oviedo, Florida Police Department's strategy to catch would-be Flock vandals by 3D-printing shells of Flock cameras, attaching them to poles around the city, and then having human cops monitor the poles for multiple nights. The police eventually caught a man named Evan Meyer, who allegedly knocked one of these decoy cameras off a pole and destroyed it with garden shears. Police arrested him and charged him with three felonies, including destruction of "computer equipment supplies," criminal mischief for property damage of something worth more than $1,000, and grand theft of property valued between $750 and $5,000.

All three of these charges were felonies, and the police department and 404 Media have shared a lengthy email exchange in which the department refuses to release any records about how the camera was made because of an ongoing criminal investigation associated with the destruction.

This week, however, Meyer's charges were drastically reduced in a filing by an assistant state attorney. He now faces two second-degree misdemeanor charges. both of which highlight that the camera is essentially worthless. The
