

https://www.smdailyjournal.com/news/state/california-sues-says-el-cajon-police-are-illegally-sharing-license-plate-info-with-other-agencies/article_ac686dbd-adab-4286-a09c-8dc5477fb707.html

California sues, says El Cajon police are illegally sharing license plate info with other agencies

By WENDY FRY/CalMatters

Oct 6, 2025

f X @ ✉ 🖨 📄 🔖 in

California Attorney General Rob Bonta has filed a lawsuit against the City of El Cajon, accusing its police department of repeatedly violating state law by sharing automated license plate reader (ALPR) data with law enforcement agencies in more than two dozen states.

The lawsuit comes at a moment of heightened concern for immigrants and women seeking reproductive care. Once data leaves California, it can be accessed by agencies in states with different policies regarding those populations.

MORE INFORMATION

Cameras for Caltrain crossings? Pilot program would dissuade drivers from stopping on railroad tracks