Great- thank you for the update. Hopefully that will alleviate the problem. I appreciate you looking into this for me.

Thanks,

Steve Casazza

Good afternoon Lt.,

After connecting with our product team I was able to confirm what you're seeing is mostly tied to older versions of the Flock mobile app. Those older builds don't consistently enforce the offense type field the same way the current experience does, which is why some searches are still coming through with "investigation" only and no offense code or case number.

To close that gap, our mobile team is rolling out a required mobile app update that removes these legacy paths and brings mobile fully in line with the current search-reason requirements. They're finalizing the work now and plan to start notifying agencies as early as next week, with the new version becoming mandatory shortly thereafter. Once that update is in place and in use across your agency, officers will no longer be able to submit searches without the required offense information.

Please let me know if you want to schedule time to discuss further!

Thanks,
Tiffani

Hi Tiffany-

Below is a picture of one of many that I found from other agencies:

Good afternoon sir,

Can you provide me specific examples of these events? Screenshots would be helpful. Typically when we see this, it is users that have not updated their Flock app recently. Once I have some additional details I can have our team dig in for you!

Best,
Tiffani

Hi Tiffany-

I am conducting a monthly audit of our network sharing and see that some agencies are still just listing "invest" or "investigation" as their search reason with no offense code or case number although it says it is required. Do you know if that is a glitch with the system or that officers are able to override it? I thought as of December 1st you were required to list an offense code to avoid having agencies just list "investigation" with nothing else. Are you able to answer this?

Thank you,
