A Pismo Beach man was arrested for the vandalism of at least three Flock Safety Automated License Plate Recognition cameras throughout Monterey County.

Forty-year-old Marcus Bee travelled to multiple locations in Monterey County vandalizing Flock cameras in the south county communities of Lockwood and Bradley.

According to the Monterey County Sheriff's Department, Bee caused thousands of dollars in damage to the cameras.

Bee's actions were captured by other security cameras in the area, allowing detectives to identify him as a suspect.

He was arrested and booked at the Monterey County Jail on a charge of felony vandalism. His bail was set at $30,000.

According to the Monterey County Sheriff's Office, Flock Safety cameras are used as an investigative tool by law enforcement agencies throughout Monterey County to solve crimes, recover stolen vehicles, locate missing persons and identify suspect vehicles.

The Sheriff's Office emphasized in a statement that the cameras are not used for civil immigration enforcement or federal immigration investigations.

"This arrest sends a clear message that anyone who intentionally damages public safety equipment will be identified, arrested and held accountable," said Monterey County Sheriff Tina Nieto in a prepared statement.

"These cameras have become an invaluable investigative resource that helps us solve crimes, recover stolen vehicles and ag equipment, locate missing persons and protect our communities. Any attempts to disable these systems will not prevent us from doing our job," Nieto said. "In this case, the suspect's own actions were captured on surveillance cameras, leading directly to his arrest. We will continue to aggressively investigate these crimes and seek prosecution against anyone who targets public safety infrastructure."
