

Chandler delays vote on Flock Safety contract until July

By Jacob Luthi and Annalisa Pardo

FOX 10 Phoenix Chandler

Updated May 22, 2026 6:33 AM MST ▼

Flock Safety camera contract: Chandler delays vote

After hours of debate and tense exchanges among council members during Thursday night meeting, the Chandler City Council delayed a decision on whether to renew its contract with Flock Safety for automated license plate reader cameras until July. FOX 10's Annalisa Pardo has more.

The Brief

- The Chandler City Council is delaying a decision on whether to renew a contract worth more than $153,000 with Flock Safety for automated license plate reader cameras.

FOX 10 AZAM

The latest Arizona headlines, national news events of the day + sports, weather, and traffic updates.

CHANDLER, Ariz. - After hours of debate and tense exchanges among council members, the Chandler City Council has delayed a decision on whether to renew its contract with Flock Safety for automated license plate reader cameras until July.

What we know: Dozens of concerned citizens packed the council chambers, and council members were expected to vote on whether to renew the over $153,000 contract with Flock Safety for their technology.

The cameras send real-time alerts to police when they detect vehicles linked to stolen cars, missing persons, or active warrants.

Chandler police launched the program in March 2024 with 14 Automated License Plate Recognition (ALPR) cameras — and a year later, the city expanded the network to 40.

In the last fiscal year, Chandler police says 7,600 alerts came through the system. Between July 2025 and April 2026, 16 stolen vehicles were recovered, nine missing persons were located and there were a total of 39 arrests.

What they're saying: Opponents argue the 24-7 cameras create a massive vehicle database that could be misused for surveillance, profiling, and tracking people without their knowledge.

WATCH LIVE

FOX 10 AZAM

The latest Arizona headlines, national news events of the day + sports, weather, and traffic updates.

Chandler Flock Safety camera contract protested

The Chandler City Council is deciding whether to renew a contract worth more than $153,000 with Flock Safety for automated license plate reader cameras 10's Jacob Luthi reports.

Supporters say the cameras give investigators more detailed, objective vehicle information to help track leads and reduce misidentifications.

"For the last three years, we have had this in the city of Chandler with the data and seen how many times we have helped people with it," Council member Christine Ellis said. "And I'm sitting there saying that I am taking accountability

FOX 10 AZAM

The latest Arizona headlines, national news events of the day + sports, weather, and traffic updates.

Big data representative from Flock was not available for an interview to say the city of Chandler owns 100% of its data under the terms of the contract and controls whether to share that data. The system meets CJIS data security standards, does not use facial recognition, and says Flock does not sell its data.

The Source

FOX 10's Jacob Luthi reported on this story by attending a Chandler City Council meeting on May 21.

ChandlerTechnology*News